Why Children Die Report Uk:

Why Children Die ,2014 This report reviews the evidence on the causes of child mortality in the United Kingdom to inform a suite of policy statements by the Royal College of Paediatrics and Child Health and the National Children's Bureau. This report highlights the most recently available data on deaths focusing specifically on areas where improved policy and practice could make a difference. It compares causes across age groups across the United Kingdom and constituent countries and with other European countries. Though child and adolescent health has improved dramatically over the past 30 years in United Kingdom many children are still dying from potentially preventable causes. Over half of deaths in childhood occur during the first year of a child's life and are strongly influenced by pre term delivery and low birth weight with risk factors including maternal age, smoking and disadvantaged circumstances.

Confessing the International Rights of Children Farhad Malekian, Kerstin Nordlöf, 2012-12-18 Within the sphere of law it is the recognition of its subjects women men children and private or public entities which has been the most prominent facet of national regional or international relations The dominance of the question of recognition has led to the development of the law and the maintenance of its provisions Obviously the legal effect of recognition is limited if rights are not implemented entirely Simultaneously justice cannot be done within the social structure of any society as long as the basic elements of that society do not properly protect the rights of children Thus the complexity one may expect of a legal issue is not just how to deal with the relevant issue in a court of justice but how to prove that the machinery of justice does not own or use the appropriate documents necessary for the examination of the issue This book on confessing the international rights of children brings together all international documents which are significant to the protection of the rights of children The introduction to each document presented in the book demonstrates that there is not necessarily any particular need to prove the legal existence of children s rights They obviously exist with full rights but the implementation of those rights is indeed not so easy In addition as a matter of principle we must not forget that the natural personality of each child has not been created by national regional or international documents but by their very existence within our global environment constituting human beings of their own age
