

- Increased in size of fish.
- Not clear to what with offspring data combined.
- Increased in lake productivity.
- Increased intermediate trophic feeding pressure.

Answer: B

A lake with various fish species would require the producers and consumers, probably related to differences between various organisms' habitat and behavior.

11. If the bottom feeding species were to die, it would:

- Change the relative size of fish.
- Overload primary producers.
- Not have an obvious effect.
- Reduce the amount of fish.

Answer: B

If the bottom feeding species were to die, there would be overgrowth of primary producers. This is because bottom feeding species would not be able to eat the algae.

12. In a lake with no bottom feeding species, the amount of dead organic matter would be:

- High compared to lakes with bottom feeding species.
- Low compared to lakes with bottom feeding species.
- Low compared to lakes with bottom feeding species.
- High compared to lakes with bottom feeding species.

Answer: B

With no bottom feeding species, the amount of dead organic matter would be high compared to lakes with bottom feeding species. This is because the bottom feeding species would be able to eat the algae.
