Abstract

Entrepreneurial activities appear across the entrepreneurial ecosystem, predominantly within small business, which either supports or inhibits emerging entrepreneurship through its varied policies, business-related events, actions, and efforts, systems, standards, facilities, groups, organizations and individuals and through:

- Commercial market research, guidance or point change and professional advice and business assistance either organizational and/or individual, including organizational and/or individual advice and assistance provided;
- Other professional market programs, entrepreneurship training and other activities, skills for strengthening entrepreneurship for new business owners.

The instrument was developed with previous existing knowledge, skills and values, including personal attributes. This model includes the practice skills considered in 1989 (14) and 1991 (15) and incorporates the graduate literature I wrote previously relating to social responsibility for work relationships and business. Therefore and with reference to the assessment instrument and description of these components, provided in context of the study of a diverse and multicultural society.
