The organizational challenge In the early 1990s, managers at most American firms began to understand that, increasingly, the business environment was characterized by rapid change and that the ability to respond to change was critical.

Indexing The process of assigning specific subject headings to a document, with the intention that it might be found more easily by a specific user. Some types are designed to provide maximum precision (such as the Library of Congress Subject Headings). Others are designed to provide ease of use rather than maximum precision, and are typically designed to represent only the broadest, most general aspects of a document's content. Examples include the MeSH (Medical Subject Headings) and Index Medicus (Index Medicus).
