

1 General Partnership

This is regarded as the most common form of partnership, in general partnership, each individual regardless of the percentage capital contribution, has equal rights and liabilities over the assets of partnership. A general partner may act as an agent for the partnership and participate in the management and operation of the business. Incomes of the general partners have to be taxed personal incomes by the government.

2.3.2 Limited Partnership

This type of partnership permits individual to contribute money or ownership capital without incurring full legal liability of the general partner. In a limited partnership, a partner's liability is generally limited to the amount that he contributed into the business. Limited partner have no authority in the active management. In this case, the partner appoint one person to oversee the day-to-day business of the partnership. The limited partnership agribusiness are therefore fewer in number than the general partnership in view of their little involvement in the management process.

Advantages of Partnership

- 1 Partnership brings together more resources (human, capital, etc.) than the sole proprietorship.
2. it benefits from the enormous talented individuals involved in the business.
3. They are very much motivated in nature than proprietorship in terms of good welfare scheme for the workers.
4. Credit is more easily available, because all partners are personally liable for the partnership.
5. Partners in the partnership only pay tax on the allocated shares and no tax is paid on the business as a whole.
6. The Limited partnership enables the general partners to obtain additional capital (from the limited partners) without relinquishing managerial control.
