

THE DRIVING OF THE MACHINE AND ELECTRIC SPEED REGULATION

ELECTRIC DRIVE

The sewing machine is driven by an electric motor which is rubber mounted in the base plate to prevent sound from the motor being propagated in the machine. It is double insulated and connection to a wall socket is done by means of a two-wire system and a universal plug. It is supplied with built-in electrical components making the whole equipment radio and TV-suppressed according to applicable international regulations.

As far as electric motors are concerned they are the absolute best quality to ensure that the machine operates reliably and to reduce service costs.

POWER TRANSMISSION

The power is transmitted from the motor by means of a cog belt to a reduction gear, which is adjustable and allows a reduction in the speed of one-fifth. There is a V-belt between the reduction gear and the main shaft, enabling a certain elasticity in the transmission. However, there is a built-in belt tension device to eliminate slipping and to compensate for possible wear of the V-belt. This consists of two belt idlers; it sets itself automatically to increase the belt pressure against the belt wheel when the needle meets a harder resistance.
