

The STIHL 07 S shows that a machine's function or purpose inevitably results in a certain form while at the same time leaving sufficient scope for an attractive product design.

It is ultimately irrelevant whether the considerable number of machines built was attributable to its outstanding design - and for which the chainsaw won several awards - or to its excellent performance.

The displacement of 75 cm³ yielded a power output of 3.3 kW (4.8 HP) with a weight of only 10.0 kg. In 1961, this was a technical masterpiece which made the STIHL 07 S a versatile and all-round chainsaw. Another feature worth mentioning in this context is that this was the first chainsaw to include a variable-flow oil pump specially developed by STIHL, with a delivery flow which could be adjusted in line with the different lengths of the bar and chain.

This all-purpose chainsaw was successfully used not only by the forestry industry, in medium stands and as a limbing saw for big timber, but also in saw mills, the construction trade, by carpenters, fire services, and by emergency rescue teams.
