Popular American culture is defined as modern-day ways of life and things that are well known and commonly accepted or have cultural patterns that are prevalent in a populace. Popular culture is often referred to as pop culture. The writer of this paper will compile an inventory of artifacts of popular culture that he has come into contact with and attempt to give them perspective. The influence of popular American culture on the author's personal decision making will be discussed. The values, commonality and patterns associated with this inventory will also be addressed. First of all, the fact that I am part of the growing trend or phenomenon that is adult education is baffling.

Many more adults are seeking to gain higher education credentials to advance their careers, the criteria which I participate. People age thirty or above comprise a majority of the adult college admissions, which I am also a part. It is hard categorize where this falls under. Is it ambition, the acquisition of wealth, pursuit of knowledge or acknowledgement? One can not really say. Higher education is measured as a value to each individual.

I like to think it is my need to grow in knowledge. Television is a major piece of pop American culture. I find myself indulging in this seemingly vital and favorite past-time as well. The audience has an endless array of choices than ever before.

Without one of these networks attached, you only have about eight channels to choose from. I am able and do watch a great deal of television programming, most of which is on cable stations. HBO, Trinity Broadcasting Network (TBN), CNN (Cable News Network), and Sci-Fi Channel are among my guilty pleasures. I can gain access to ways to acquire wealth or a supplement to my salary through infomercials, events that were before my existence on the History Channel or insight into me as a black man on TV One by watching Black Men Revealed. Programs can be recorded for later viewing when you are not able to watch at the airing time.

Television is more interactive than ever with these and other additions. This gives me and other Americans access to entertainment, resources, miscellaneous information/knowledge and news at any given time. Enjoyment of various types of music is one of my favorite past times that I indulge while driving usually. All forms of music influence people today but not necessarily the same genre of music. Hip-hop (ofskool to gangsta), rhythm and blues (oldies to neo-soul), jazz (smooth to avant-garde), country (classic to bluegrass), gospel (traditional to Christian rock), and all others in-between appeal to specific audiences, some ethnically, some personally and others spiritually. Personally, I listen to gospel, a
