POULTRY HOUSING

Improvements to poultry housing systems in developing countries have focused on providing an environment that satisfies the birds' thermal requirements. Newly hatched birds have a poor ability to control body temperature, and require some form of supplementary heating, particularly in the first few days after hatch. Many developing countries are located in tropical areas where minimal heating is required. Indeed, the emphasis in these countries – particularly for meat chickens – is on keeping the birds cool.

Production systems

International poultry breeding and feed companies operate in many developing countries and have established large-scale commercial farms in a significant number of them. The housing and equipment used make it possible to exert considerable control over the climate provided to the birds, but such houses are expensive to build and operate, and require a large turnover of birds to make them viable. Owing to the lower construction and running costs, medium- and small-scale commercial housing is popular in developing countries. By far the most prevalent poultry farming system in many developing countries is the small-scale scavenging system, which usually involves only very basic (if any) shelter for housing birds.

Large-scale commercial farms: Commercial houses in developing countries are clear-span structures with litter on the floor for meat birds or cages for laying hens. The commercial chicken meat industry in some developing countries is vertically integrated, with single companies owning feed mills, breeder farms, hatcheries and processing plants. Arrangements typically involve agreements in which the farmer or landowner provides the housing, equipment and labour, while the company provides the chicks, feed, medication, transport and supervision.

For controlled-environment housing of layers, multi-tier cage systems are common. Most large-scale commercial farms use controlled-environment systems to provide the ideal thermal environment for the birds (Glatz and Bolla, 2004). Birds' performance in controlled-environment sheds is generally superior to that in naturally ventilated houses, as the conditions can be maintained in the birds' thermal comfort zone. Achieving the ideal environment for birds depends on appropriate management of the poultry house.

Modern houses are fully automated, with fans linked to sensors to maintain the required environment. Some commercial operators use computerized systems for the remote checking and changing of settings in houses. Forced-air furnaces and radiant heating are the main methods of providing heat to young chicks.

Medium-scale commercial: In developing countries, most medium-scale commercial layer and chicken meat houses rely on natural airflow through the shed for ventilation (Daghighi, 2001). Where required, meat birds and layers are given radiant heating early in their lives, to maintain body temperature. Laying hens may be kept in commercial wire cages in open sheds, or in sheds with wire sides to exclude wild birds, scavenging poultry and predators.

Small-scale commercial (improved genotype stock and supplementary feeding): Houses of various shapes and dimensions are typically constructed using local building materials consisting of timber or mud bricks and bamboo. These small-scale commercial facilities may have several rooms or compartments where chicks are brooded, pullets are reared and layers are housed in a floor-based system or in cages. Meat birds are often kept in single-age groups of 50 to 100 chickens within the house. The house can

Achieving sustainable production of poultry meat Volume 1 Prof. Steven C. Ricke, 2016-12-31 Reviews latest research on zoonoses affecting poultry meat such as Salmonella and Campylobacter as well as methods for their control on the poultry farm and in the slaughterhouse Summarises advances in understanding and optimising poultry quality traits such as flavour colour tenderness shelf life and nutritional quality Discusses developments in measuring and reducing the environmental impact of poultry production

Achieving sustainable production of poultry meat Volume 1 Steven C. Ricke, 2017-01-01 To meet growing demand the FAO has estimated that world poultry production needs to grow by 2.3% per year to 2030 Much of the increase in output already achieved has been as a result of improvements in commercial breeds combined with rearing in more intensive production systems However more intensive systems and complex supply chains have increased the risk of rapid transmission of animal diseases and zoonoses Consumer expectations of sensory and nutritional quality have never been higher At the same time consumers are more concerned about the environmental impact of poultry production as well as animal welfare Drawing on an international range of expertise this book reviews research on safety quality and sustainability issues in poultry production Part 1 discusses risks from pathogens detection and safety management on farms and in slaughterhouse operations Part 2 looks at ways of enhancing the flavour colour texture and nutritional quality of poultry meat Finally the book reviews the environmental impact of poultry production

Achieving sustainable production of poultry meat Volume 1 Safety quality and sustainability will be a standard reference for poultry and food scientists in universities government and other research centres and companies involved in poultry production It is accompanied by two further volumes which review poultry breeding nutrition health and welfare
