Re: Website.com proposal

Dear Jane,

I hope you are having a good trip out West. I enjoyed our breakfast meeting and found our conversation about conducting a measurable television advertising test for Website.com to be invigorating.

We spoke by phone shortly thereafter to consider how we might structure a test around the two :30 spots you emailed with just $00,000 to spend. What follows is a proposal that recaps the assignment; discusses creative, production, media, and measurement; and outlines cost and timing.

Assignment Recap

In addition to having a simple, unique, and memorable URL, the Website.com website provides a real service to consumers by making it fast, easy, and convenient to compare various offers, then apply online for the offer that is best suited to their individual needs.

Even in the absence of broad awareness-building advertising, traffic on the site is brisk and growing. But a question remains: can Website.com substantially grow the number of online applications through an advertising effort?

The purpose of the test is to answer this question and to do so for $00,000.

If our goal is merely to drive increased click-throughs to the Website.com website, our test would be relatively simple to construct: choose a test market, pick some dayparts and stations, run the spots as constructed, then measure results.

But our goal is not to measure traffic; it is instead to measure completed orders.

This makes the assignment more complex, and as a result, there are four issues we need to address: creative execution, production, media, and measurement.
