

with a sudden yell as he pointed out of the window: "Lao lu! Lao lu!"
 "What is he saying?" asked the engineer.
 "He is showing the old road," said the student. "The old way. We call it here the Yunnan-Burma highway."

- 3 Running parallel to the highway, at the foot of a slope, was a small black road, which at first glance could be taken for a stream. Along its banks were uniform rows of tall pointed trees – cypresses, I guessed. Or cedars. I could never remember the names of trees; the engineer would no doubt have enlightened me, if I had been foolish enough to ask him. Now he was asking the student whether he thought the explorer Marco Polo had ever come to China. Some people seemed to suggest he hadn't. 15 20

- 4 "Oh, Marco?" said the student, as though speaking about an old classmate. "Marco came here for sure. There are many proofs. You can check in the history books." The young man was starting to sound irritated; perhaps he wished, as he did, that the engineer would shut up and poke his long nose elsewhere.

- Q7 In paragraphs 2, 3 and 4, the writer suggests that the engineer is a very irritating person. Pick out and write down one expression from each of these paragraphs and explain in each case the characteristic that makes him irritating. [3]

(i)	Paragraph 2	[1]
(ii)	Paragraph 3	[1]
(iii)	Paragraph 4	[1]

- Q8 In paragraph 4, what made the student sound as if he were speaking about "an old classmate"? [1]

- 5 The old road teased like a mirage, disappearing beneath the bus, reappearing first on one side, then on the other. As we turned a corner, a new page seemed to have appeared, and the tranquil view changed dramatically. Dust storms were raging over quarries which were so vast that the bulldozers and cranes poised around their rims looked no bigger than toy models. Convoys of trucks were everywhere: some crawled like ants up and down hillsides shaved to a raw red, while others trundled along river banks trashed with boulders and tree trunks. For mile after mile, colonies of workers lined the roadside, washing and cooking under shelters made with plastic sheets and tin roofs. A brand new highway was under construction, appearing like a vast scar across the countryside. 25 30

- Q9 (a) In paragraph 5, the writer says that the old road "teased like a mirage". In what two ways is this expression particularly effective? [2]

(i)	[1]
(ii)	[1]

- (b) Identify the two expressions of not more than five words each which
