Weiss, Peter G. Kaufmann, 2013-11-21 Cardiovascular disease continues to be the number one cause of death in the United States. Behavioral medicine was developed and shaped into the one source of morbidity and mortality in our country following the definition of behavioral medicine. Despite a 35% reduction since 1964, cardiovascular disease remains the leading cause of death in the United States. Behavioral medicine is the interdisciplinary field that combines knowledge and techniques from the behavioral and biomedical sciences to understand the role of behavior in the development and integration of health and illness. The Framingham study among others has identified the application of this knowledge and these techniques to prevention, diagnosis, treatment, and rehabilitation. Three major risk factors implicated in the development of CHD are smoking, elevated serum cholesterol, and high blood pressure. At this concept of biobehavioral collaboration in 1986, given that these factors account for less than 50% of the variance associated with CHD, scientists and clinicians of many disciplines to consider how they might more effectively address the problem. Jenkins (1976) it has become obvious that additional diagnostic, treatment, and prevention strategies must be identified if further progress is to be made in disease prevention and simultaneously among others behavioral psychology control. Medical Device Register, 2002 Contains a list of all manufacturers and other specified processors of medical devices registered with the Food and Drug Administration and permitted to do business in the U.S. with addresses and telephone numbers.
