

Cultural Differences in the Better-Than-Average Effect for Easy and Difficult Skills

Americans are boastful and Japanese are reserved. These are widely held national stereotypes (Madon et al., 2001), but is there any truth to them? One line of evidence comes from cross-cultural studies of the better-than-average (BTA) effect—people's tendency to judge themselves as better than their peers at a variety of traits and skills (Alicke & Govorun, 2005). The BTA effect tends to be strong and consistent among American participants but weaker and often nonexistent among Japanese participants (Heine, Lehman, Markus, & Kitayama, 1999).

I conducted the present study to explore cross-cultural differences in the BTA effect. Americans are boastful and Japanese are reserved. These are widely held national stereotypes (Madon et al., 2001), but is there any truth to them? One line of evidence comes from cross-cultural studies of the better-than-average (BTA) effect—people's tendency to judge themselves as better than their peers at a variety of traits and skills (Alicke & Govorun, 2005). The BTA effect tends to be strong and consistent among American participants but weaker and often nonexistent among Japanese participants (Heine, Lehman, Markus, & Kitayama, 1999).

BETTER-THAN-AVERAGE EFFECT ACROSS CULTURES

In the present study, I compared Japanese and American students' judgments of their own ability compared to their peers using a standard questionnaire procedure. They made judgments about eight skills—four easy ones and four difficult ones. This allowed me to compare both the BTA effect and the WTA effect across the two samples. Based on previous research, I expected that American participants would show a stronger BTA effect than Japanese participants for easy skills. The more interesting question, however, is how the two groups will compare in terms of the WTA effect.

Method

Participants

The Japanese sample included 65 women and 24 men with a median age of 21 years who were enrolled in an introductory psychology course at Doshisha University in Kyoto, Japan. The American sample included 32 women and 10 men with a median age of 20 years enrolled in an introductory psychology course at California State University in Fresno, California. The Japanese students participated as part of a class activity, while the American students participated to meet a course requirement.

Design and Procedure

All participants completed a questionnaire that asked them to judge their own ability, compared with their peers' ability, at eight different skills. The skills included four easy skills (using a computer
