

Teaching: Why You Need to be Called for It

by Joshua Walter

What Makes a Teacher?

What is a teacher? If you look at its definition in a dictionary, it basically refers to a person who helps others learn. They are professionals whose primary responsibility is to help students and guide them throughout their learning process. But is this truly what makes a teacher? Why then do others say it's a calling? Before we begin with getting into what truly makes a teacher and why it's a calling, I first want you to think about your favorite teacher and what made them so special to you. If you ask me, my favorite teacher was Mr. James Hendrickson. In the university where I pursued my degree in law, he was one of those professors you avoided every time you chose your course schedule. He was tough, he gave the most difficult exams, and if you didn't come to class prepared, he will continue to grill you with the most difficult questions and wring your brain until its dry. Students often leave their classes exhausted, but they certainly never left without learning anything. If you sit in on his classes, you'll see how tensed everyone is with the frantic scribbling and the sounds of pages flipping quickly. Occasionally, you might even see a tear or two from students.

Teaching Was a Calling For Him

If he was such a tough professor, you may be wondering why he was my favorite professor. Behind that strict and tough demeanor, Mr. Hendrickson is a warm person who deeply cared for and inspired his students to become the best versions of themselves. He gave the toughest classes, and toughest recitations, but he gave the best ones as well. I'm sure we have all been saddened by the sudden passing of Mr. Hendrickson, and I'd also like to take this opportunity to honor his leg
