Welcome to our Cornish heritage column. Len Sheppard, pictured, is chair of the Newquay Old Cornwall Society and co-ordinator for Bodie Newquay community museum.

He is publicity officer for the Federation of Old Cornwall Societies as well as vice-chair for Celtic Congress Cornwall and Berranow Kernow. A supporter through membership of many wide-ranging Cornish heritage organisations, Len also runs his own group, called the Association for Cornish Heritage.

As part of the Newquay Heritage Archive and Museum, it has a Cornish research room and gallery and he also runs a website and various social media pages.

When you live in the far west or even mid-Cornwall, it's easy to forget the many little Cornish settlements lying to the far east.

Larger towns such as Saltash and Looe are often passed through as we travel into England and beyond, but smaller communities also have a story to tell.

To the north of Saltash is the small parish of Bodie Fleming. Just less a total area of 1.78 square miles and a population of about 750.

The number of people living within the parish has risen sharply in recent years as Hart, one of the two villages, has become a dormitory settlement for Plymouth.

Previously, employment would have been through agriculture and services at the two mansion houses with their estates.

For a short period from 1850 to 56, the Wheal Sophia mine opened, extracting copper ore. This seems to have been short lived and following a change of name to Moditonham and Morraborough Cornish between 1860 and 1862, then Cornwall South Tamar in 1863, it closed in 1868.

When market gardening was an important element of rural life, Bodie Fleming was known as "The Cherry Village" with fruit and vegetables shipped down the River Tamar to Plymouth from Moditonham Quay.

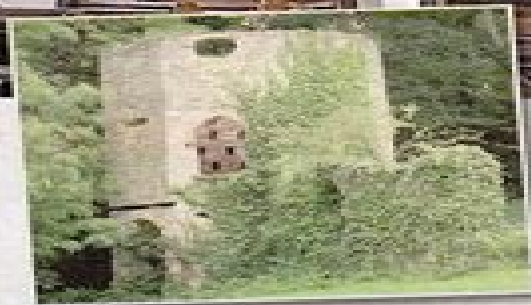

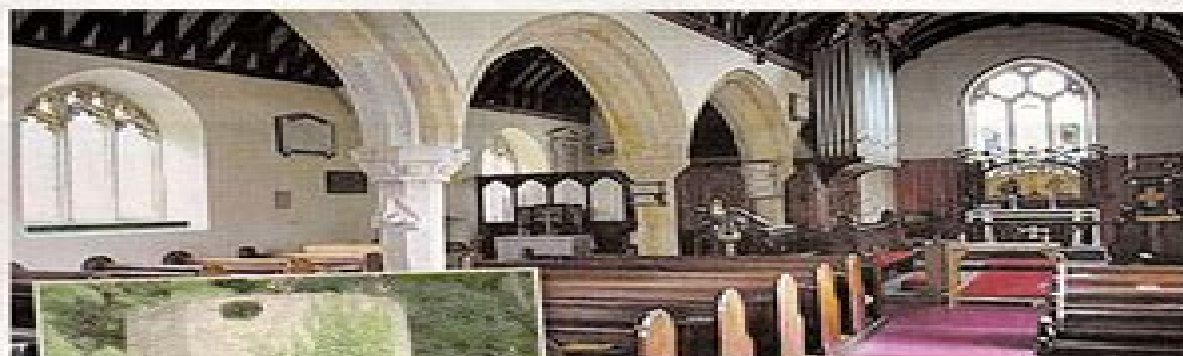

The quay to the east of the parish lies on the shore of the Kingsmill Lake, a creek above Saltash, and used to transport all manner of agricultural goods and produce as well as that from mining activities.

The quay today is a favourite spot for those enjoying views over the river and bird watching, the salt marshes within Kingsmill Lake offering a wonderful habitat.

As with many other Cornish settlements, names have changed over time.

First recorded in 1258, it was Bodiflamet, meaning "Flamer's dwelling", believed by some, including the 17th century Cornish historian William Hals, to have been linked to Flemings, perhaps a Norman family, who are recorded in documentary as holding a number of manors in Cornwall.

The church has a stone effigy of a knight in armour thought to be Stephen le Fleming, who was a medieval Crusader, perhaps one of that family.

With only one manor in this parish, situated to the east of the village of Bodie Fleming, it was recorded during medieval times as held by Philip de Vascourt followed by seven generations of his descendants.

The manor was called Moditon in the early days and held from the early of Cornwall.

The Vascourts were part of the powerful Norman family who also held the manor of Trevelick and several in Devon.

Later, the original suggested castle at Modeton, now Moditonham, was possibly just a fortified residence with houses to circulate during from the 14th century.

Records show on December 8, 1452 Bishop of Exeter Edmund Lacy made a grant "to Richard Talbot esquire and Edmund his wife of Bodiflamet in Cornwall for service in presence of either or both of them in their house at Moditon in that parish, during pleasure".

Records also make enquiries regarding the vacancy of the parish church at "Bodiflamet alias Bodiflamet or Bodiflamet in Cornwall", resulting in chaplain John Fykes being made rector.

This illustrates the various alternative spellings for the parish and there were certainly several people named Fleming at that time and over a number of generations.

The manor at Modeton was replaced by the existing Georgian mansion around 1710, incorporating some of the earlier buildings, and again altered around 1790.

It was Grade II listed in 1968 and bequeathed to the National Trust in 1978.
