

Code group	The content in progress notes and challenges in reporting
Subgroup	Efforts to achieve neutral and objective descriptions of patients
Meaning unit	Writing progress notes was emphasised in my nursing education They stressed writing objective observations, not subjective judgements The report had to be factual and short formulated To document as neutrally as possible I want to be rational in what I observe You should write: it was observed that...or you can write that the patient said he was sad, not that I believe he was sad It has to be objective We use quotation marks and write what the patient said in order to prevent writing our interpretations What the patient said is thoroughly documented You can't write that the patient is weird You may write that he suddenly ran out of the living room, not what you think about his behaviour You can't write he is paranoid No... describe the situation Yes, he darkened in his eyes He said this is not my medicine
Condensate	We learned the importance of writing objective progress notes from our nursing education. We are supposed to write shortly and neutrally about what we have observed from a situation and not our interpretations. If a patient behaves deviantly, you have to write exactly what he did. We often use quotation marks to report what the patient said. We don't write that the patient was paranoid, but describe his facial expressions
