ASP Institutional Framework Milton Owuor, 2018-06-19 Academic Paper from the year 2017 in the subject Law Comparative Legal Systems Comparative Law grade 1 0 University of Pretoria language English abstract This study seeks to establish how the legal and institutional framework for positive complementarity may be effectively implemented It is argued that the existing legal and institutional framework in respect of the effective combatting of impunity is largely unsatisfactory The evolution of the principle of complementarity in the context of the Rome Statute is explored with emphasis on the theoretical constraints on the principle which in turn raise practical challenges The analysis provides a theoretical background to the conceptualisation of positive complementarity The study traces the evolution and development of the concept of positive complementarity examining its characteristic features and attributes and the possibilities and opportunities the concept presents for the effective combatting of impunity It examines the various scholarly arguments and propositions advanced to explain the concept of positive complementarity and analyses the attendant challenges and limitations It is noted that there is no fixed and universally acceptable definition of positive complementarity It is therefore argued that there is a need for the establishment of a coherent legal and institutional framework for positive complementarity In this light appropriate policy alternatives and considerations both domestically and internationally are considered On the international level limitations characterising the current institutional framework of the Secretariat of the Assembly of States Parties ASP Secretariat are identified It is argued that a fundamental restructuring of the ASP Secretariat is essential and measures to restructure the ASP Secretariat in order to reinforce its effectiveness in fulfilling its mandate on positive complementarity are identified At the domestic level the various aspects of implementing legislation are discussed In conclusion the establishment of an independent office to address positive complementarity and revitalise the institutional framework within the legal structures of the ASP Secretariat is examined The study envisages that the proposed institutional framework for the ASP Secretariat if implemented would effectively support the national jurisdictions of state parties in their implementation of the concept of positive complementarity This study represents an unequivocally original contribution to knowledge and research adapting to the local impacts of climate change The results of this thesis show that climate visualization can help audiences concretize otherwise abstract aspects of climate change and that the localized focus can make climate change appear more personally relevant and interesting for targeted audiences Nevertheless despite these communicative qualities the analyses also show that participants interpretations are shaped by their preconceptions of climate change as a global and distant issue to be solved by other actors such as national governments or through international policy negotiations Although climate visualization can enhance a sense of proximity with climate change the localization of climate risk can also lead to participants downplaying the significance of climate impacts In addition despite the intentions of inducing a sense of agency in both cases of climate visualization participants critically negotiated messages concerning their roles as individuals in mitigating or adapting to climate change and assigned this responsibility onto other actors These findings show that although climate visualization presents certain communicative qualities it is not a panacea for engaging lay audiences with climate change This also underlines the importance of considering cultural and social aspects of the communicative event when studying and developing climate visualization tools as a means of communication

In Their Place Stephen Crossley, 2017-08-20 This book critiques how impoverished communities are represented by politicians the media academics and policy makers and how our understanding of these neighbourhoods is often misleadingly shaped by these stories The alleged behavioural failings of poor people have attracted a great deal of academic and political scrutiny Spatial inequalities are also well documented and poor neighbourhoods have been extensively researched However other spaces have been reimagined in different ways by politicians academics journalists and social reformers These imagined geographies include exoticised slums cities being reclaimed by nature the street and domestic spaces like the kitchen or even the bedroom In Their Place highlights how these spaces are represented and how these representations are deployed manipulating political and media discourses around the individuals and communities who live there These distortions are often used to keep people in their place by making sure everyone knows where the poor belong This book will reorient those interested in human geography away from deprived neighbourhoods and back to the foundational spaces where political decisions and poverty are made in Britain today
