(Unit no.5): (Role of government in an economy)

Recommended Prior Knowledge

This Unit can be studied without any prior knowledge and it is possible to start the course at this point. There is, however, a number of topics covered in the earlier Units including the role of the government in a mixed economy, market failure and government taxes and subsidies in Unit 2 and public corporations and the difference in the pay of public and private sector workers in Unit 3 which will help understanding of this unit.

Context

As already mentioned, the Unit builds on the role of the government in mixed economies, business organisations in the public sector, taxation and differences in earnings between public and private sectors. It also provides a link to topics in later Units, including inflation, unemployment and economic growth in Unit 6, policies to alleviate poverty in Unit 7 and protectionism in Unit 8.

Outline

The Unit starts by describing the government as a producer of goods and services and as an employer and then goes on to describe the aims of government policy in terms of full employment, price stability, economic growth, the redistribution of income and balance of payments stability. It then explores possible government policy conflicts, types of taxation and the government's influence on private producers.

AO	Learning outcomes	Suggested Teaching activities	Learning resources
5a	Students should be able to describe the government as a producer of goods and services and as an employer	Having recapped market failure and the role of the government in a mixed economy, students could examine the theory of government intervention by undertaking the activities in Grant Unit 30. Then they could research in groups what products their government produces and classify them into merit, public and other goods. They could also research how many people the government employs and in what type of jobs. They could then compare their findings with the position in another country. Dransfield, Cook and King have questions in relation to an interesting case study on Cuba (page 114).	Online  http://www.tutor2u.net/economics/content/30/a/marketfail/market_failure.htm            (includes why the state provides public goods, subsidies merit goods and identifies forms of government intervention) Textbooks            Grant Unit 30            Dransfield, Cook and King pages 114-115
