1. GENERAL

1. Object

The sole object of weapons training is to teach all ranks the correct manner of handling their weapons in order to kill the enemy. Instruction will always bear this fact in mind, and will continuously impress it upon those whom they instruct.

2. General description

Weight, 20 lb.; caliber, .55 in.; weight of magazine containing 5 rounds, 2 lb. 7 oz.; total length, 5 ft. 4 in.

3. Penetration of the anti-tank rifle

Although the bullet will penetrate the armour of light A.P. tanks up to 500 yards, and inflict casualties on the crew, it should be withheld until the range is well within 200 yards. The angle of impact of the anti-tank rifle bullet on the armour has a greater influence than the range at which it is fired. For example, while the penetrative power is only 10 per cent. less at 500 yards than at 100 yards, it is 25 per cent. less when the angle of impact is over 20 degrees, and 50 per cent. less at over 40 degrees of the latter range. (For further details see the Appendix.) The main element of fire must therefore be decided by the fire's determination to hit the selected part of the tank face and engine, rather than by range only. As a general rule the .55 in. anti-tank rifle bullet will penetrate all parts of the Pz. Kw. Mk. I light tank, and the sides and rear of the hull and turret of the Pz. Kw. Mk. II light tank, at 250 yards range at an angle of impact of 20 degrees or less. It does not penetrate the armour of heavier tanks except in certain points such as the rear of the turret and cupola of the Pz. Kw. Mk. IV at very short range. When shooting at German tanks of the Pz. Kw. Mk. III and Tiger tanks fire should be aimed, if it is possible, at vulnerable points, especially on the junction point of turret and hull and gun turret. In cases where there is no working turret and the turret is jammed.

4. Recruit instruction

Instructors must appreciate that, while the lessons are designed to be taught in one period, more time will be necessary in order to give recruits sufficient practice to obtain efficiency. There are no ready substitutes between the anti-tank rifle and other weapons that a soldier should be capable of handling it with a small amount of instruction. Anti-tank rifles are not specialist weapons, and all ranks will be taught to fire
