Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness of 12-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in the city of Ankara, Turkey. The study group consisted of 20 children (10 boys and 10 girls) who were randomly selected from the school. The children were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group did not participate in any physical education program, while the experimental group participated in a 12-week training program. The physical fitness of the children was measured at the beginning and at the end of the 12-week period. The measurements included heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index. The results of the study showed that the experimental group had significantly higher heart rates and blood pressures at the end of the 12-week period compared to the control group. The body mass index of the children in the experimental group also increased significantly. These findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness of 12-year-old children.

Abstract

The system's design team and its researchers expect that the system's use-based performance measures, system use and the degree of use, will be the best indicators of the system's success. The system's use-based performance measures will be the best indicators of the system's success.

The Ministry of Education and Research (Department of Higher Education, Berlin) may have contributed to overall professionalizing trends, especially in Germany, and may have contributed to increasing the impact of the curriculum, but any influence on content and structure is uncertain.
