

ONE HEADACHE AFTER ANOTHER: BIOCHEMISTRY EDITION

I. Introduction:

In this case study, we learn that some office workers suffer from headaches in close to the "average" range after completing 100 hours of stress and speed tests for the same reasons. The levels of lactic acid metabolites will be elevated while learning about the neurochemistry of respiratory and neurological pH.

The following objectives were implemented in the analysis of this case study:

- To recall and use our past studied systems, definitions, formulas, physiological functions, and chemical formulas, in particular, the metabolic acid and alkalosis.
- To explain how the subject has physiological acidosis and
- To use our studied principles to explain their physiological responses and what they should do by adjusting the metabolism of the biochemical buffer system.

II. Review of Related Literature

Common physiological functioning of metabolism, the cardiovascular system, and the neurological system depends on the ability of respiratory mechanisms to process and remove metabolites in pH, which is primarily controlled by hydrogen ion concentration in plasma. Compared with the concentration of other ions, the concentration of hydrogen ions in metabolic ions in the extracellular space and in most mammalian tissues. Commonly, the pH of hydrogen ions in the plasma is about 7.35-7.45, while the pH of hydrogen ions in the extracellular space is 7.35-7.45. The pH of hydrogen ions in the plasma is low pH, a high concentration hydrogen ions and in the form of total or relative acids and are the products of metabolic and respiratory activities in the body. Hydrogen ions, which are often associated with changes in the hydrogen ions and pH, are also associated with changes in pH (pH 7.35-7.45).

Metabolic activity, defined as a pH level (pH 7.35-7.45) within an animal, which is controlled by the hydrogen ion concentration in the extracellular space. The changes in the concentration of the hydrogen ions in the extracellular space and production, absorption and excretion, and loss of these substances. The most common cause of metabolic acidosis is related to lactic acid metabolism, leading to an accumulation of acid. This leads to a decrease in the concentration of hydrogen ions in the body, or a decrease in the concentration of hydrogen ions in the body. The changes in the concentration of hydrogen ions in the body are often associated with changes in the concentration of hydrogen ions in the body. The changes in the concentration of hydrogen ions in the body are often associated with changes in the concentration of hydrogen ions in the body.
