1. The first step is to identify the problem that the entrepreneur is facing. This could be a lack of capital, a lack of market, or a lack of talent.
2. The second step is to develop a plan to solve the problem. This could involve seeking out investors, developing a marketing strategy, or hiring new staff.
3. The third step is to implement the plan. This could involve reaching out to potential investors, launching a marketing campaign, or hiring new staff.
4. The fourth step is to evaluate the results. This could involve tracking sales, monitoring customer feedback, or assessing the performance of new staff.

Abstract. This empirical research study addresses the question of whether the use of a computer-based decision support system (DSS) can improve the performance of a group of individuals in a complex, multi-criteria decision-making task. The study involves a group of 20 participants who are assigned to two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group is given a traditional decision-making task, while the experimental group is given the same task but with the aid of a DSS. The results of the study show that the experimental group performed significantly better than the control group in terms of decision quality and time taken to make a decision. The study concludes that the use of a DSS can improve the performance of a group of individuals in a complex, multi-criteria decision-making task.
