Peer Pressure Among Teenagers Children grow up and move into teenage lifestyles, involvement with their peers, and how they look in other peoples eyes start to matter. As children get older they seem to spend a lot more time with their friends, and a whole lot less time with their parents. Therefore what their friends say and do rub off on them, or they start to adopt what their friends do as right or routine. Even though they have been taught most of their lives that it was wrong, or they were taught what...
