

AP Biology Spring Final Study Guide

As promised, your final exam has 100 multiple choice questions. The questions represent a wide range of topics from the entire school year appearing approximately as the College Board breaks them down for this course (25% molecules and cells, 25% heredity and evolution, & 50% organisms and populations). While the test should be easier than a typical AP test, I still advise studying and reviewing these critical materials.

Molecules and Cells: Know your Macromolecules!

1. Fill in the chart describing which experiment is used to test for each substance:

Substance	Testing Procedure/Solution	Result
Carbon	FIRE!
Starch
Simple Sugar

2. Describe how each of these organic molecules benefits a living organism:

Lipid
Protein
Carbohydrate
Nucleic Acid

3. List the monomer (single molecule building block) of each of these macromolecules. Also include a generic name of the enzyme that would break these large molecules down into their subunits.

- Nucleic Acid:
- Protein: FYI - your test uses the term "dipeptide" quite often!
- Polysaccharide (carbohydrate):
- Lipid:

4. Draw some macromolecules...

Draw a typical amino acid and label its functional groups:	Draw a glucose molecule here
Fatty acids consist of 2 main subunits. Draw a glycerol molecule here.	Draw a small fatty chain here - indicate if your fat is saturated or unsaturated.
