

DEIMOS LOVES LURO: THE CLIMB

Written and Illustrated by Patrick Fillion

Drake and Deimos walked in silence.

They escalated the craggy, dimly-lit steps at a steady pace, both of them eager to depart this ominous level of the Labyrinth.

Drake had insisted that Deimos walk in front of him. That way, the larger demon could keep an eye on the shorter purple one, making sure he didn't try to make a break for it. He could also keep his gaze firmly fixed upon that incredibly firm, rippling tawo-tinted gluteus maximus. Every so often, he'd smack Deimos' ass, sending the message that it was time to pick up the pace. But also, Drake just liked to watch those gorgeous cakes ripple and jiggle.

Deimos chanced a glance over his shoulder. "I'd climb faster if ya didn't grab my butt every five minutes!" Deimos winked.

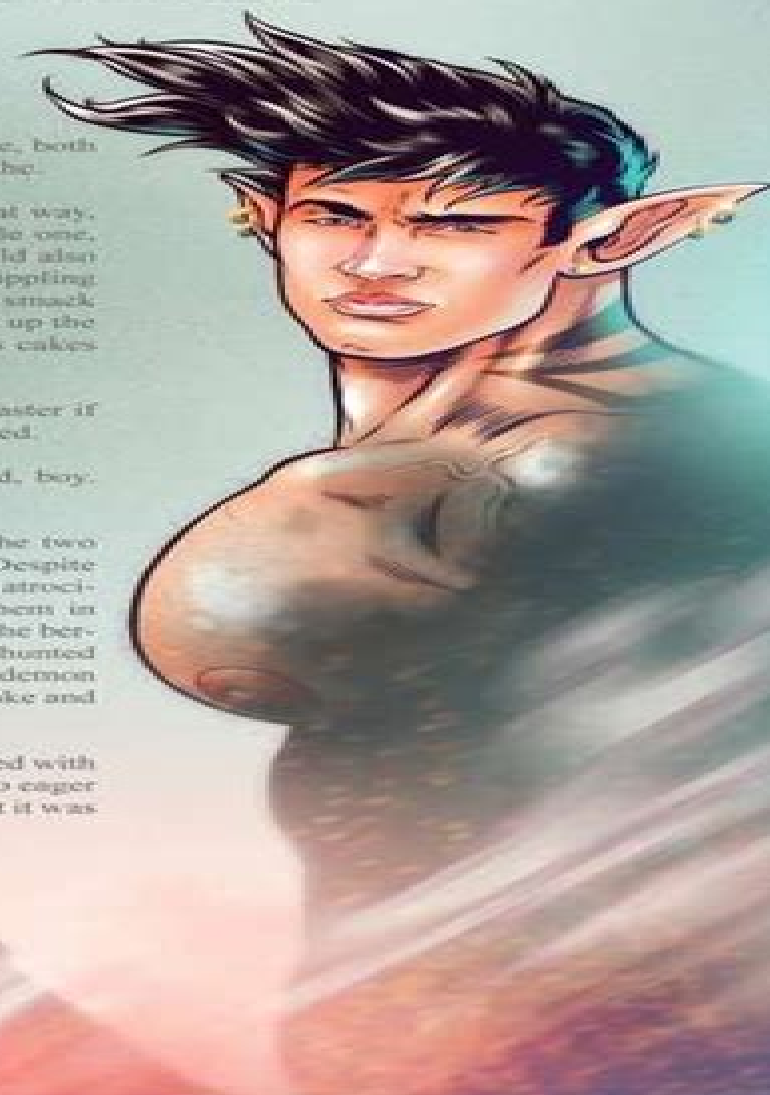

"Talking sass is a great way to get yourself backhanded, boy. Shut up and climb!", countered Drake.

They fell quiet again. Ensnared in their own silence, the two men could listen attentively for approaching danger. Despite their combined might, this particular level was rife with atrocities; monstrosities that could, conceivably, overpower them in numbers significant enough to cause them serious harm. The berserkers and the unnameable resided in this place. They hunted attractive males such as these two prime specimens of demon studliness, and they were not kind to them. The sooner Drake and Deimos departed, the safer it would be for both of them.

For Deimos, there was the added incentive of being reunited with Luro. It still wasn't entirely clear to him just why he was so eager to find himself in that evil little cunt's clutches again... but it was virtually all he could think about.

As the pair drew closer to a large mezzanine, the entrance to yet another largely unexplored sub-level, they both heard a frantic, desperately frightened call for help.

Alarmed Deimos took off in the direction of the beleaguered wail.
