

4. What relationship do you observe between glucose concentration and fermentation rate?

5. Why is the "No Sugar" tube included in the experiment, and what does it demonstrate?

6. How do the results of this experiment relate to real-world applications such as baking and brewing?

Drawing Conclusions

Reflect on the variability in fermentation rates observed in the experiment, the effect of glucose concentration on yeast fermentation, and the real-world applications of understanding yeast metabolism in the food and beverage industry. Consider how these findings contribute to our understanding of biotechnological processes and their implications for society.
