

Diagram of short story plot structure

Typically, a short story plot follows this pattern:

Rising action: Tension increases as the initial incident or conflict gets worse.

Complication: An initial incident or conflict is introduced and we wonder what will happen or how the situation will be resolved.

Exposition: The scene is set and the characters are introduced.

Climax: This is the moment of greatest tension when the most important event of the story occurs.

Denouement (or falling action): The tension decreases as issues are resolved or explained.

Resolution: The reader gains understanding of the central conflict and its outcome. Often the character(s) learns something new or finds new ways to carry on.
