Placing the Frontier in British North-East India Reju Ray, 2023-03-15 The book is a study of the travels of colonial law into the North East frontier of the British Empire in India Focusing on the nineteenth century it examines the relationship of law and space and indigenous place making Inhabitants of the frontier hills examined in this book were not defined as British subjects yet they were incorporated within the colonial legal framework The work examines the nature of this legal limbo that produced both the hills and their inhabitants as interruptions but equally as integral to the imperial project Through a study of place making by indigenous inhabitants of the frontier it further demonstrates the heterogeneous narratives of self and belonging found in sites of orality and kinship that shape the hills in the present day The Comprehensive History of the Nepalis in North East India K.K.
