

Dermatology Fellowship Personal Statement

Moments before adding fresh boiling water, I pause and let fragrant oolong leaves pass gently between my index finger and thumb. As I dab my cheek with fine white linen, having sipped from the bone china cup, I understand, yet again, that this is more than a beverage. It is total sensory involvement, and therein lies the beauty.

To be a dermatologist, one needs to have specialized skills and knowledge, but additionally, you must have a keen sense of touch. As you pass your examining fingers over acne pustules, there is intuitive knowledge in sheer tactility. Yet this is one of the primary reasons I love dermatology. As the skin is the largest organ in the human body and many diseases like jaundice, spider naevi, palmar erythema, angular stomatitis, petechiae, and more are expressed through the skin, I view the specialty as a way of dealing with questions of health and illness. With respect to diagnoses and treatment, the manual skills of a physician can be as determinative as any test in modern medicine. Moreover, there is an interrelationship with almost all other specialties, including mental health. However, dermatology services can take many months to provide patients with good insurance, and this type of care is almost unheard of by patients with government-subsidized insurances like Medicare and medical assistance. Thus, a specialist who seeks to reach out to the impoverished can make a profound difference.

I wish to expand my practice beyond the confines of my comfortable office and the sanitized environment of the hospital clinic. In light of more than 3,000 dermatological diseases and conditions that require treatment of patients of every age afflicted with inflammatory, inherited, environmental, occupational, and malignant skin diseases, I know that there are many who suffer in silence. To have the ability to effectively treat every derm condition as well as gain access to new research venues, I know this fellowship is instrumental in realizing the choice to devote my skills to the service of all who are in need. What may be lost in income, I have no doubt, will be gained in far greater riches.
