

A-Level Psychology - Exam-Style Questions - Social Influence

Outline how Milgram investigated the effects of two factors on obedience (4 marks)

- They replaced location from a prestigious school setting to a run-down building.
- Compliance fell to 47%, showing they had less power in this setting.
- In the original experiment, they wore a uniform. In a variation, the experimenter was an ordinary member of the public dressed in regular clothes.
- Obedience fell to 20%; this suggests uniform acts as a potent authority symbol.

Outline Authoritarian personality traits as an explanation for obedience (2 marks)

- People with authoritarian personality traits are incredibly obedient to authority.
- It originates from childhood through harsh parenting, for example, severe discipline and harsh criticism.

Outline and explain two methodological issues in Asch's studies of social influence (4 marks)

- Participants were all white, male students (the review was androcentric and ethnocentric)
- You can't apply the findings to women, different cultures or people of different ages.
- The task was artificial (not an accurate representation of everyday life)
- This means that the participants may have responded to demand characteristics, so findings don't generalise to everyday situations where group interactions are more frequent or essential.

Outline one psychological explanation of obedience to authority (2 marks)
