Abstract

Context. Hospice social workers are charged with completing a psychosocial assessment for every new enrollee. This assessment is part of the patient's comprehensive assessment and serves to inform the plan of care and key quality indicators.

Objectives. To review the content of hospice social work assessments because little is known about what assessment topics are included or overlooked.

Methods. Using a cluster random sample from all 50 states, we contacted hospice agencies and requested a blank copy of the social work assessment completed at intake. We then systematically reviewed the content of these assessments to determine which domains were included and which were omitted. A total of 165 hospice agencies participated (response rate 42%). Among the assessments provided, 76 (72%) were unique assessments.

Results. Participating hospices were largely for-profit (65%), nonprofit (30%), and either medium (39%) or small (37%) in terms of average daily census. Over 60% of the sample assessments included content on the following: financial resources; family structure; coping resources; bereavement risk; past losses; caregiver depression; religiosity/spirituality; patient anxiety; patient depression; and advance directives. However, most assessments did not include items evaluating the following: patient physical/functional status; preferences for treatment/care; awareness of diagnosis, prognosis, or disease progression; communication and literacy issues; changes in relationship intimacy/sexuality; and cultural values, beliefs, and customs.

Conclusion. Hospice social workers should consider modifying their assessment practices to include a comprehensive array of assessment topics pertinent to patients and families. An accurate, comprehensive assessment that contributes to a holistic, interdisciplinary approach will likely lead to better clinical outcomes. J Pain Symptom Manage 2017;53:40–48. © 2016 American Academy of Hospice and Palliative Medicine. ## Introduction

Hospice provides care to nearly 1.6 million dying patients annually and 1.2 million U.S. deaths occur while under the care of hospice.<sup>1</sup> According to Medicare Hospice Conditions of Participation, hospice agencies are required to complete a comprehensive assessment for every newly enrolled hospice patient and their family.<sup>2</sup> The psychosocial assessment conducted by social workers is an instrumental part of the full interdisciplinary hospice assessment, which must be completed within five days of patient enrollment.<sup>3</sup> Thus, when new patients enroll in hospice, social workers are charged with conducting a thorough assessment of patient/family needs, risks, resources, and coping. Information from these assessments is used to guide interventions, visit frequencies, care planning, and referrals. However, little is known about the content, comprehensiveness, and format of these assessment tools. If important psychosocial domains
