

4. The same development in Question 3 is thinking of incorporating a water tower. A large tank open to the atmosphere, on tall supports, held high above the development. Water would be pumped into the tank from a large reservoir nearby, and then could be used in case of emergency (e.g., a drought). In this case, the tank is located 20 m (vertical) above the water level of the reservoir. You estimate that the losses associated with pumping the water up to the reservoir are $50 \text{ N}\cdot\text{m}/\text{kg}$ when the flowrate is $0.005 \text{ m}^3/\text{s}$. How much power must the pump provide to make this system work?
5. As part of a fountain being designed for the centre of the housing development, water will flow as two free jets from a tee attached to a pipe, as shown in the figure below. Your colleague who is in charge of this segment of the design insists that the tee is properly attached to the pipe, but you are not so sure. His design includes an anchoring force with an x-component of $80,000 \text{ N}$. Neglect gravity and viscous effects.
- Based on that anchoring force, what is the maximum allowable velocity of fluid leaving the tee? Assume the velocity of each free jet is the same.
 - Assume an exit velocity of 1.2 m/s in both the x- and y-directions (do not use your answer from part i). What anchoring force is required in the y-direction for this system to work?

6. Hydraulic jumps commonly develop close to the end of a river spillway. In a hydraulic jump, the depth of an open channel flow increases dramatically above ground level from an upstream value of h_1 to a downstream value of h_2 . The downstream depth h_2 depends on the upstream depth, the velocity of the fluid and the acceleration due to gravity. You have been asked to do some experiments related to designing for hydraulic jumps. To simplify the process you first decide to identify a suitable set of dimensionless variables for this problem. What are these variables?
7. You work for a big oil company at one of their refineries. As part of an expansion plan, you are helping to design the piping system for transporting one of their products (motor oil) around the plant (viscosity = $0.15 \text{ N}\cdot\text{s}/\text{m}^2$, density = $885 \text{ kg}/\text{m}^3$). You are focused on one section of pipe: it is 8 m long, horizontal, has a diameter of 5 cm and has a volumetric flowrate of $0.01 \text{ m}^3/\text{s}$. What pressure drop do you expect over this section?
8. As part of your work for the refinery, your boss has asked you to consider the large section of piping required to transport the motor oil (viscosity = $0.15 \text{ N}\cdot\text{s}/\text{m}^2$; density = $885 \text{ kg}/\text{m}^3$) from the distillation column (point A) to the storage tank (point B). The system uses galvanized iron piping, 15 cm in diameter, and you need to attain a flowrate of $0.09 \text{ m}^3/\text{s}$. The pressure in the pipe where it
