Punnett Squares & Probability of Inheritance

A Punnett Square is a tool that can be used to predict the outcome of a genetic cross. Remember, that the phenotype is the physical appearance of a trait, and the genotype is the inherited combination of alleles (represented by letters). An example of a Punnett Square is shown in the picture to the right. The genotypes of the parents are split on the outside top/left side of the Punnett Square, and the potential offspring's genotypes are determined by dragging and dropping the alleles into the four boxes. Each of the four boxes represents a 1/4 or a 25% chance of the offspring having that genotype.

1. What is the probability of the offspring having the genotype AA? _____
2. What is the probability of the offspring having the genotype Aa? _____
3. What is the probability that the offspring will have the dominant phenotype? _____

Read the guided problem below of how to set up a Punnett Square and solve a genetic cross.

In rabbits, black fur (B) is dominant and white fur (b) is recessive. The allele for black fur is B. The allele for white fur is b.

A homozygous recessive female rabbit is crossed with a heterozygous male rabbit.

4. What is the female rabbit's genotype? _____
5. What is the female rabbit's phenotype? _____
6. What is the male rabbit's genotype? _____
7. What is the male rabbit's phenotype? _____

On outside of the Punnett Square below, split the genotypes on the outside top and left of the Punnett Square. Drag and drop the alleles into the 4 squares to determine the 4 genetic possibilities for the offspring.

8. List the 4 genotypes, phenotypes, and the probability of each offspring.
