Directions: Read the directions carefully for each section and completely fill in the table for all four parts.

Part 1: Source Review

For Part 1, review Lindstedt et al.'s (2021) article, "Fathers' Prenatal Attachment Representations and the Quality of Father-Child Interaction in Infancy and Toddlerhood." Based on this article, completely fill in the following table. Notes are available in the table to help you find the required information.

Scoring Criterion: Describe research methods and quantitative data used in research.

Research Summary

Research Question (located in the introduction, above the Method section)		Hypothesis (located in the introduction, above the Method section)
The purpose of the study was to determine whether early child-father interaction quality at ages 4 and 18 months is related to the degree of pre-birth attachment between fathers and their babies.		The creators hypothesized that favorable child-father initiation at ages 4 and 18 months would result from modified pre-birth link representations of the father.
Theory (located in the introduction, in the first paragraph)
The question centered on the connection hypothesis, which suggests that caregivers' initial connections develop and establish social-emotional formative institutions.
Independent Variable (located in the hypothesis)	Dependent Variable (located in the hypothesis)	# of Participants (in the Methods section, under the subheading Participants)	What statistic(s) were used? (in the Analytic Strategy paragraph above the Results section)
Dignity of pre-birth fathers.	Quality of child-father interactions at 4 years and 18 months.	A total of 435 families were invited to participate in the small study. Only 153 cases were accepted through consent forms. Out of 153, 134 fathers accepted their children.	Descriptive statistics used were standard deviation, mean and 95% confidence interval.
Designing for Diversity (Did the researchers do to accommodate different cultures?) (found in the Methods section under the Participant and Procedure subsections)
Families were enrolled at their first visit to the clinic. All pregnancies that attended the hospital from 2007 to 2009 were invited, regardless of method. It is worth noting that the same number of couples who are concerned and unmarried couples are invited to participate in this competition. In addition, families expecting twins were included.
