Based on a true story, The Pursuit of Happiness unfolds the narrative of Chris Gardener, a determined entrepreneur grappling with the challenges of 1980s San Francisco. His singular ambition is not personal wealth but rather to be a devoted father to his son. Despite endeavors to enhance the family's financial standing through the purchase and sale of medical equipment, an unfortunate investment leads the family deeper into the throes of poverty.

Chris's pivotal moment comes when he encounters a sports car in the bustling business district, where happiness seems abundant. Learning that the car owner is a stockbroker, Chris realizes that success in this field is attainable for anyone adept with numbers and people, even without a college degree. Utilizing his interpersonal skills, Chris secures an internship, embarking on a six-month competition against 20 candidates for a solitary paid position. His journey is fraught with personal upheavals, including the departure of his wife, the loss of his apartment, financial assets, and a stint in jail. Yet, through it all, his unwavering dedication to his son and his dream persists.
