Discussion The authors of this paper have shown that the use of a single, standard, 100% threshold for the detection of a significant association between a risk factor and a disease is not appropriate. The use of a single threshold for all studies is inappropriate because the threshold should be adjusted for the number of comparisons made. The use of a single threshold for all studies is inappropriate because the threshold should be adjusted for the number of comparisons made. The use of a single threshold for all studies is inappropriate because the threshold should be adjusted for the number of comparisons made.

QUESTION I have a 1994 Ford Taurus with 100,000 miles. The engine is running fine, but the car is making a noise that sounds like a rattling or clunking sound. It seems to be coming from the front end. What could be the cause of this noise?

ANSWER The noise you are describing could be caused by a number of factors. It could be a worn ball joint, a loose tie rod end, or a worn strut. It could also be a loose brake caliper or a worn brake pad. To determine the exact cause, you should have a mechanic inspect the front end of the car. They will check the ball joints, tie rod ends, struts, and brakes. If any of these components are worn or loose, they will need to be replaced or tightened. Once the problem is fixed, the noise should go away.

Abstract Background: The purpose of this study was to determine the prevalence of self-reported depression in a sample of young adults and to examine the association between self-reported depression and self-reported health status, self-reported stress, and self-reported coping strategies. Methods: A cross-sectional study was conducted with a sample of 1,000 young adults (ages 18-25) who completed a self-report questionnaire. The questionnaire included items related to self-reported depression, self-reported health status, self-reported stress, and self-reported coping strategies. Results: The prevalence of self-reported depression was 15.2%. Self-reported depression was significantly associated with self-reported health status, self-reported stress, and self-reported coping strategies. Conclusions: The results of this study suggest that self-reported depression is a common condition among young adults and is associated with self-reported health status, self-reported stress, and self-reported coping strategies.

QUESTION
 A 60-year-old male with a 10-year history of type 2 diabetes mellitus presents to the clinic with a 2-week history of increasing fatigue, weight loss, and decreased appetite. He reports that he has been unable to tolerate his usual diet and has lost approximately 10 pounds (4.5 kg) over the past few months. He has no history of alcohol consumption, smoking, or recent travel. His current medications include metformin 2550 mg daily and insulin glargine 40 units nightly. His last hemoglobin A1c was 8.5% (69 mmol/mol). Physical examination reveals a thin, elderly man with no acute abnormalities. Laboratory studies show a hemoglobin of 11 g/dL (7.0 mmol/L), serum ferritin of 100 ng/mL, and a positive result on a fecal occult blood test. Which of the following is the most likely cause of his symptoms?

ANSWER
 A. Gastric adenocarcinoma

EXPLANATION
 The patient's symptoms of weight loss, fatigue, and decreased appetite, along with the laboratory findings of iron deficiency anemia (hemoglobin 11 g/dL) and a positive fecal occult blood test, strongly suggest a gastrointestinal source of chronic blood loss. The most common cause of iron deficiency anemia in this age group is gastric adenocarcinoma, which can lead to occult bleeding. Other potential causes include peptic ulcer disease, colorectal cancer, and inflammatory bowel disease, but the positive fecal occult blood test and the patient's age make gastric adenocarcinoma the most likely diagnosis.
