

Raymond's Run

INTRODUCTION

BRIEF BIOGRAPHY OF TONI CADE BAMBARA

Toni Cade Bambara, born Milona Miller-Cade, spent her childhood in Harlem, Brooklyn, Queens, and New Jersey. She changed her name to Toni at age six, and again in 1970 to add Bambara to West African ethnic groups after coming across the word in her great-grandmother's sketchbook. Bambara earned a BA in theater arts and English literature from Queens College in 1970, where she was one of the few non-white students. Bambara had aspirations for jazz and was a member of the Dance Club of Queens College. She went on to earn her master's degree from the City College of New York in 1964. From 1965 through the 1980s, Bambara worked in university outreach programs and taught English, Afro-American Studies, and manuscript writing at a variety of universities and institutions, including her own alma mater City College. She was also an artist-in-residence at multiple universities and held lectures at the Library of Congress and the Smithsonian Institution. During the 1960s, Bambara was active in the Black Arts Movement and Black feminism, compiling several anthologies of Black writers and publishing the short story collection Conjure My Love (in which "Raymond's Run" appears) in 1972. After publishing several more short stories collections in the 1970s and her novel The Salt Eaters in 1980, Bambara shifted to focus on film and television production. As a whole, her body of work is highly political and openly challenges the oppression and injustice that African Americans face. Bambara died of cancer in 1995. Her novel Three Black Women: My Children was published posthumously in 1999.

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

Toni Cade Bambara was heavily involved in various 1960s activist movements, including the civil rights, Black nationalism, and feminism. The goal of these movements was to achieve equal rights and a promise heightened sense of identity and solidarity among marginalized groups, particularly race or ethnicity and women. "Raymond's Run" is set in Harlem, presumably in the early 1970s. Though the outside historical context of this period isn't directly addressed in "Raymond's Run," civil rights and feminism are important to the story given that the protagonist, Squaky, is a fiercely independent young Black girl who is proud of her identity and challenges traditional gender roles. In this way, the story is clearly influenced by the activist culture in the U.S. that reached its peak just prior to the 1970s.

RELATED LITERARY WORKS

Conjure My Love, the short story collection in which "Raymond's Run" appears, was written during the Black Arts Movement, a 1960s and 1970s movement in which Black artists and activists sought to create new ways of capturing the Black experience. In addition to Bambara, other prominent creators from this movement include poet Nikki Giovanni (My House), Cotton Candy and Rains-Deal and feminist writer Audre Lorde (Black Unicorn, Sister Outsider). The Black Arts Movement also features in the 1970s Harlem Renaissance, a sociocultural and artistic movement in which African American literature, dance, music, art, and music (particularly jazz) flourished. Bambara drew inspiration from this era in her own activism, including works of Harlem Renaissance visionaries like Langston Hughes ("I, Too"), "Just America Be America Again" in her anthologies of Black writers. The stories in Conjure My Love, including "Raymond's Run," embody the ethos of Black feminism in that they feature young Black girls who are tough and brave rather than stereotypically weak or victimized. Other books that feature strong Black female protagonists include Alice Walker's The Colour Purple, Zora Neale Hurston's Their Eyes Were Watching God, and Toni Morrison's Sula.
