Marek Worsch, 2004-12-02 Inhaltsangabe Abstract The Diploma Thesis at hand considers the interdependence of employee motivation on the one and feedback and job appraisal processes in organisations on the other hand Basically today s job appraisal procedures have one major disadvantage They rarely comprise more than a subjective assessment of employee performance This assessment is normally carried out by an employee s superior In this thesis it will be argued that through the dynamics of bias and politics in organisations the validity of job appraisal information is significantly distorted Hereby the effectiveness of job appraisals is affected negatively since they cannot serve as a reliable basis for personnel decisions But more important the distorted information is likely to result in overseeing or ignoring an individual s achievements in the workplace Lack of appreciation of one s effort and additionally the feeling of being treated inequitably compared to co workers may erode an employee s motivation However in a world of accelerating globalisation and thus increasing competition a motivated workforce is the key to an organisation's success. The thesis will propose a potential solution for this dilemma: public feedback. This means that the information gained through job appraisals will not be discussed one on one involving only superior and subordinate. Rather the discussion is extended to the latter's peers. The prerequisites for and the proceeding of this approach to employee evaluation will be provided. Also the thesis covers the analysis of a survey. This was accomplished to test the acceptance of a public feedback process among a sample of white collar workers. The results show a general acceptance and appreciation of the idea of feedback in public.

V. Hamilton, Gordon H. Bower, Nico H. Frijda, 2012-12-06 This book presents the contributions of the members of an Advanced Research Workshop on Cognitive Science Perspectives on Emotion Motivation and Cognition The Workshop funded mainly by the NATO Scientific Affairs Division together with a contribution from the British Economic and Social Research Council was conducted at Il Ciocco Tuscany Italy 21-27 June 1987 The venue for our discussions was ideal a quiet holiday hotel 500m high in the Apennine mountain range approached by a mile of perilously steep winding narrow road The isolation was conducive to concentrated discussions on the topics of the Workshop The reason for the Workshop was a felt need for researchers from disparate but related approaches to cognition emotion and motivation to communicate their perspectives and arguments to one another To take just one example the framework of information processing and the metaphor of mind as a computer has wrought a major revolution in psychological theories of cognition That framework has radically altered the way psychologists conceptualize perception memory language thought and action Those advances have formed the intellectual substrate for the cognitive science perspective on mental life Productivity in the Federal Sector United States.
