Borchardt, Roger M. Freidinger, Tomi K. Sawyer, Philip L. Smith, 2006-01-19 In the late 1980s it became painfully evident to the pharmaceutical industry that the old paradigm of drug discovery which involved highly segmented drug sign and development activities would not produce an acceptable success rate in the future Therefore in the early 1990s a paradigm shift occurred in which drug design and development activities became more highly integrated This new strategy required medicinal chemists to design drug candidates with structural features that optimized pharmacological e g high affinity and specificity for the target receptor pharmaceutical e g solubility and chemical stability biopharmaceutical e g cell membrane permeability and metabolic pharmacokinetic e g metabolic stability clearance and protein binding properties Successful implementation of this strategy requires a multidisciplinary team effort including scientists from drug design e g medicinal chemists cell biologists endocrinologists pharmacologists and drug development e g analytical chemists pharmaceutical scientists physiologists and molecular biologists representing the disciplines of pharmaceuticals biopharmaceuticals and pharmacokinetics drug metabolism With this new highly integrated approach to drug design now widely utilized by the pharmaceutical industry the editors of this book have provided the scientific community with case histories to illustrate the nature of the interdisciplinary interactions necessary to successfully implement this new approach to drug discovery In the first chapter Ralph Hirschmann provides a historical perspective of why this paradigm shift in drug discovery has occurred Medical News Letter ,1948
