

The Seventh Myth: “The Fortress”

We took a long time to identify this myth (May 2016) as it differs from the image that we have had about radicalized youth:

- To have self-control and not be distracted from God by temptations, especially sexual, offered by others.
- “To transform my body into a fortress against intrusive thoughts, especially sexual” is an explicit reason mentioned by the young people when radicalized.
- But during the process of deradicalization, we observe that the personal investment into religious rituals can be interpreted as an obsessive compulsive disorder, as a reassurance function to shut down unacceptable urges.
