Shapeshifter Emily pulled her knees up to her chest wrapping her arms around them Mark please I really don't want to hear this But Mark continued caught up in the tale The Shapeshifter is as old as the forest itself It feeds on fear drawing strength from the terror of its victims Some say it was once human cursed by ancient magic to wander the woods for eternity always hungry always hunting A twig snapped in the darkness beyond the fire's light causing Emily to jump What was that she whispered her eyes wide with fear Elizabeth put a comforting arm around her friend's shoulders It's nothing Em Probably just a rabbit or something But Mark's eyes narrowed as he scanned the treeline He'd heard something too and it hadn't sounded like any rabbit he'd ever encountered Maybe we should call it a night he suggested his tone casual but his posture tense As the group prepared for bed the strange noises continued growing louder and more frequent Emily tossed and turned in her sleeping bag unable to shake the feeling of being watched In the tent next to hers Elizabeth lay awake her skepticism warring with a growing sense of unease Mark took first watch sitting by the dying embers of the fire with a flashlight in hand He told himself he was being paranoid that there was nothing out there but normal forest creatures But as the hours crept by he couldn't shake the feeling that something was circling their camp waiting for the right moment to strike
