

The Scarlet Ibis

JAMES HURST

Adapted from: Elements of Literature: Third Course, Austin: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 2003.

It was in the clove of seasons, summer was dead but autumn had not yet been born, that the ibis lit in the bleeding tree. The flower garden was soaked with coming leaves magenta pink and lavender green until about the people place. The few whitebells by the chimney still needed time, but the inside days in the elm was unseasoned and red-hot back and forth like an empty needle. The late gervayard flowers were blossoming, and their small shafts across the common field and through every corner of our house, speaking only the names of our dead.

It's strange that all this is still so close to me, now that summer has long since fled and time has had its way. A pointless needle where the bleeding was need, just outside the kitchen door, and now if an outside ring in the elm, its song seems to die up in the leaves, a silver dust. The flower garden in pain, the house a gleaming white, and the pale forest across the yard needs tonight and again. But sometimes (like right now), as I sit in the cool, green-dipped porch, the pointless begins to run, and time with all its changes in ground away-and I remember Doodle.

Doodle was just about the exact brother a boy every had. Of course, he wasn't strong nearly like old Miss Loomis, who was in love with Porcelain Wilcox and wrote him a letter every day; but was a nice story, like someone you meet in your dreams. He was born when I was six and was, from the start, a disappointment. He came all head, with a tiny body which was red and shivered like an old man's. Everybody thought he was going to die every body except Aunt Niece, who had delivered him. She said he would live because he was born in a shell, and would never make from being a beggar. Doodle had Mr. Heath, the carpenter, build a little mahogany coffin for him. But he didn't die, and when he was three months old, Mama and Daddy decided they might as well name him. They named him William Armstrong, which is like tying a log out on a small fire. Such a name sounds good only as a confession. I thought myself pretty smart at many things, like holding my breath, change green. If you called him, he'd run around as if he were going in the other direction, then he'd look right up at you to be picked up. One time, he'd been made him look like a doorknob, so I began to call him Doodle, and in time even Mama and Daddy thought it was a better name than William Armstrong. Only Aunt Niece disagreed. She said real babies should be named with special signs since they might run out to be taken. Naming my brother was perhaps the kindest thing I ever did for him, because nobody expects much from someone called Doodle.

"Bleeding tree reference to a certain tree provided in the text, the name derives from the fact that the tree sheds a certain milky substance whenever a branch is broken from it.

Although Doodle learned to crawl, he showed no sign of walking, but he wasn't idle. He talked so much that we all quit listening to what he said. It was about this time that Daddy built him a go-cart and I had to pull him around. At first I just pushed him up and down the piazza, but then he started crying to be taken out into the yard, and in ended up by my having to lug him wherever I went. If I go much as picked up my dog, he'd start crying to go with me and Mama would call from where she was. "Take Doodle with you."

He was a brother in many ways. The doctor had said that he wasn't yet six months, was fat, was cold, so we cared and that he must always be warmed gently. A long line of doctors went with me, all of which I ignored since we got out of the house. To discourage his coming with me, I'd run with him across the end of the common road, and across him would contact on our wheels.

Sometimes I accidentally turned him over, but he never told Mama. His skin was very sensitive, and he had to wear a big coat like whenever he was out. When the going got rough and he had to sit on the side of the go-cart, the big slipped all the way down over his ears. He was a sight. Finally, I could see I was liked. Doodle was my brother, and he was going to die. I was, no matter what I did, as I dragged him across the burning common field to share with him the only berry I have. Old Woman Swamp. I pulled the go-cart through the two-o'clock fern, down into the green distance where the palmetto stands, whiskered by the stream. I lifted him out and set him down in the soft rubber grass beside a tall pine. His eyes were round with wonder as he gazed above him, and his little hands began to make the rubber grass. Then he began to cry. "The running, jumping, or climbing the vines in Old Woman Swamp, and I wanted more than anything else someone to race to Horsehead Landing, someone to love with, and someone to push with in the top back of the green pine behind the back, where across the fields and swamps you could see the sea. I wanted a brother. But Mama, crying, told me that even if William Armstrong lived, he would never do these things with me. He might not, she sobbed, even be "all there." He might, as long as he lived, lie on the rubber sheet in the corner of the bed in the front bedroom where the white mosquito net curtain billowed out in the afternoon sun, looking like palmetto stands."

It was hard enough having an invalid brother, but having one who possibly was not all there was unbearable, so I began to make plans to kill him by smothering him with a pillow. However, one afternoon as I smothered him, my hand pulled between the iron posts of the foot of the bed, he looked straight at me and smiled. I slipped through the screen, down the rubber bed, showing. "Mama, he smiled. He's all there? He's all there?" and he was.

When he was two, if you laid him on his stomach, he began to move himself, crawling slowly. The doctor said that with his weak back this motion would probably kill him, but a doctor, thinking, he'd push himself up, making first and then a soft gurgle, and finally wriggle back onto the bed like an old woman's dead. I was told one Mama smothered him, but had noticed right across her mouth, her eyes wide and unblinking. But he learned to crawl (it was his third winter), and we brought him out of the front bedroom, putting him on the rug before the fireplace. For the first time he became one of us.

As long as he lay all the time at last, we called him William Armstrong, even though it was formal and seemed as if we were referring to one of our ancestors, but with his crawling around on the wooden rug and beginning to talk, something had to be done about his name. It was I who named him. When he crawled, he crawled backwards, as if he were in reverse and couldn't problems and errors. We'd looked ourselves with my hands and had told about that beautiful, beyond the reach of the mosquito net. Then when the closed eyes of the one looked across in the top of the pine, we'd drop our heads into the screen and watch them float away toward the sea.

There is within me (and with others I have watched in in others) a kind of country home by the ocean of love, much as our blood sometimes flows the end of our connection, and at times I was mean to Doodle. One day I took him up to the back left and showed him his coffin, telling him how we all had believed he would die. It was around with a film of Paul Jones' speckled as full the sun, and around with had built a nest inside it.

Doodle studied the mahogany box for a long time, then said, "It's not mine."

"It is," I said. "And before I'll help you down from the left, you're going to have to reach it."

"I won't reach it," he said calmly.

"Then I'll leave you here by yourself," I threatened, and made as if I were going down.

Doodle was frightened of being left. "Don't leave me, Brother," he cried, and leaned toward the coffin. His head, writhing, reached out, and when he reached the coffin, he screamed. A scorching red flapped out of the box into our faces, coming in and covering us with Paul Jones. Doodle was petrified, so I put him on my shoulder and carried him down the ladder, and even when we were outside in the bright sunshine, he clung to me, crying, "Don't leave me. Don't leave me."

When Doodle was five years old, I was embarrassed to having a brother of that age who couldn't walk, so I got out to reach him. We were down in Old Woman Swamp and it was spring and the cold, green smell of bay flowers hung everywhere like a musical song. "I'm going to teach you to walk, Doodle," I said.

He was under comfortably on the soft mat, leaning back against the
