Background Information

Recombinant DNA technology is one of the new techniques of biotechnology. Biotechnology uses living organisms to make new chemical processes or to produce substances, combining biology with chemistry and science with industry. Biotechnology includes the field of genetic engineering, which is the science of directly manipulating genes to produce recombinant DNA. Genetic engineering techniques are used in a variety of industries, in agriculture, in basic research, and in medicine.

Through genetic engineering, there is great potential for the development of useful products. Researchers have already developed vaccines of measles, human growth hormone, insulin, and interferon from animal organisms. A gene coding for a particular protein in mammalian cells is being sequenced. The gene sequence is sequenced and the protein sequence is determined. For example, the gene that codes for the production of human insulin has been sequenced from the common bacterium E. coli. Then the human gene for protein is being sequenced and large amounts of insulin can be collected.

In an introduction to recombinant DNA technology, the exercise that follows illustrates on paper some of the steps of recombinant DNA experiments done in laboratory.
