

THE REMARKABLE ROCKET

By OSCAR WILDE

Illustrated by JOYCE BONNYE

THE king's son was going to be married, so there were great rejoicings. He had waited a whole year for his bride, and at last she had arrived. She was a Russian princess, and had come all the way from Finland in a sledge drawn by six reindeers. The sledge was shaped like a great golden sun, and between the sun's wings lay the little princess herself. Her long ermine cloak reached right down to her feet, on her head was a tiny cap of silver tissue, and she was as pale as the snow palace in which she had always lived. So pale was she that as she drove through the streets all the people wondered, "She is like a white rose!" they cried, and they threw down flowers on her from the balconies.

At the gate of the castle the prince was waiting to receive her. He had dreamy violet eyes, and his hair was like fine gold. When he saw her he sat upon one knee, and kissed her hand.

"Your picture was beautiful," he murmured, "but you are more beautiful than your picture," and the little princess blushed.

"She was like a white rose before," said a young page to his neighbor, "but she is like a red rose now," and the whole court was delighted.

For the next three days everybody went about saying, "White rose, red rose, red rose, white rose," and the king gave orders that the page's salary was to be doubled. As he received no salary at all this was not of much use to him, but it was considered a great honor, and was duly published in the Evening Standard.

When the three days were over the marriage was celebrated. It was a magnificent ceremony, and the bride and bridegroom walked hand in hand under a canopy of purple velvet embroidered with little pearls. There were six state trumpets, which sounded for five hours. The prince and princess sat at the top of the great hall and drank out of a cup of clear crystal. Only one person could drink out of this cup, for if false lips touched it, it grew grey and dull and cloudy.

"It is quite clear that they love each other," said the little page, "so clear as crystal," and the king doubled his salary a second time.

"What an honor!" cried all the courtiers.

After the banquet came was to be a ball. The bride and bridegroom were to dance the waltz together, and the king had promised to play the flute. He played very badly, but no one had ever dared to tell him so, because he was the king. Indeed, he knew only two airs, and was never quite certain which one he was playing; but it made no matter, for, whenever he did, everybody cried out, "Charming! charming!"

The last item on the programme was a grand display of fireworks, to be let off exactly at midnight. The little princess had never seen a fireworks in her life, so the king had given orders that the royal procuration should be in attendance on the day of her marriage.

"What are fireworks like?" she had asked the prince, one morning, as she was walking on the terrace.

"They are like the Aurora Borealis," said the king, who always answered
