with other categories of power and difference such as race class and age and how this intersectionality contributes to the design and use of built spaces In addition to examining the spaces themselves Sewell explores research methods for studying gendered experiences in architecture She argues that traditional research methods in vernacular architecture studies which often focus on building based fieldwork should be complemented by other methods such as letters oral histories and diaries that expand the understanding of buildings beyond their construction date and reveal how those buildings have been used and represented over time Digging into primary records Sewell posits can help challenge our assumptions about who influences architecture and urban development illuminating the roles of women and others in the building and shaping of space Thoroughly researched yet accessible for scholars new to the study of vernacular architecture Exploring Gender in Vernacular Architecture bridges the gap between specialized scholarship and broader public understanding Students of architectural history gender studies and cultural history will find it a valuable resource not only for examining the relationship between gender and architecture but for engaging new methodological tools that may further their own research
