

SS2 THIRD TERM NOTE 1

CONSTITUTIONAL DEVELOPMENT IN NIGERIA 1

PRE-INDEPENDENCE CONSTITUTIONS

INTRODUCTION: It is important to say that from the beginning, the gradual movement of Nigeria from the status of a British Colony to one of self-rule, was not a carefully worked out program by the British Colonial authorities. The transfer of power to Nigerians was simply meant to reduce the hostility of Nigerian political elites against the British overlords. Thus, if constitution after constitution made the Nigeria political elites little by little, participant of their own affairs, it was because a combination of both internal and external factors worked in favor of gradual disengagement of the British imperialists from their stranglehold on the Nigerian economy. It is therefore, not true to say that the British, or any other colonial power for that matter, voluntarily relinquished their control over the affairs of the Nigerian colony.

THE CLIFFORD'S CONSTITUTION OF 1922

The Clifford's constitution was adopted on the accounts of the following demands.

1. The setting up of a legislative council in each British territory with elected and nominated members being equally represented.
2. The creation of a House of Assembly composed of members of the Legislative council and six (6) elected representatives to take charge of purely financial and monetary affairs.
3. African veto over taxation.
4. The appointment of West Africans into the judiciary as it then existed.
5. Separation of the judiciary from the legislative branch of the government.
6. The establishment of a sub-regional University to provide higher education for the qualified West Africans.
7. The abolition of racial discrimination in the civil service.
8. Development of Municipal government, etc.

Thus, the demands were mainly responsible for the constitutional developments that occurred in British West Africa in the 1920s. the first of these was the Clifford constitutional development of 1922.

MAIN FEATURES OF THE CLIFFORD'S CONSTITUTION

1. The legislative council: the constitution provided for a legislative council which then replaced the Nigerian Council which was highly criticized by the Nationalists. The legislative council was a body of 46 members, consisting of 27 officials and 19 unofficial members. The latter group consisted of four (4) elected members (3 for Lagos and 1 for Calabar) and fifteen (15) members nominated by the governor. Majority of the members were non-Nigerians. Nigerians were under-represented and their relevance under minded both in Legislative and Executive Councils. All matters relating to finance, tax, budget etc, were the responsibility of only the Executive Council in which Nigerians were not members.
2. Introduction of the Elective Principle: for the first time in history, election was introduced. This provision prompted some nationalists and writers to see Sir Hugh Clifford as sincere in the colonial policy of introducing Nigerians to Democracy. The election was restricted to only Lagos and Calabar with the privilege of electing representatives into the Legislative Council.
