The Films of Charles and Ray Eames Eric Schuldenfrei, 2014-12-05 The Films of Charles and Ray Eames traces the history of the Eameses work examining their evolution away from the design of mass produced goods and toward projects created as educational experiences Closely examining how the Eameses described their work reveals how the films and exhibitions they generated were completely at odds with the earlier objectives exemplified in their furniture designs Shifting away from promoting the consumer culture they turned their attention to the presentation of complex sets of scientific artistic and philosophical ideas During a critical period from the late 1950s to the early 1960s there was a moment of introspective self reflection in the West stemming from the events of the Cold War This moment of uncertainty was crucial for it provided the incentive to question the values and concerns of society as a whole In turn designers began to question their own sense of purpose temporarily expanding the purview of design to a broader field of inquiry In the case of the Eameses they identified an overriding problem related to consumerism and excess in America and sought to resolve the issue by creating a network of communication between universities governments institutions and corporations The solution of promoting greater education experiences as an alternative to consumerism in America required that different sectors of society functioned in unison to address political social economic and educational concerns The Films of Charles and Ray Eames reconsiders how design intersects with humanity culture and the sciences
