

Why I Want to Become a Dental Hygienist

Topic: Family, Life & Experiences | Words: 568 Pages: 2

Introduction

Ever since I was a child, I have dreamed about working in healthcare. There was something very appealing and motivating in helping people overcome their health issues and improving their quality of life. I am convinced that some of my most prominent personality qualities have contributed to the formation of this dream of mine. From my self-observations and other people's opinions about me, it seems that compassion has always been an integral part of my personality.

To this day, I cannot be indifferent to other people's struggles, and my natural reaction is to do everything in my power to rectify their situation. Apart from that, since early childhood, I have been interested in biology: I was curious about how bodies work and why people get sick.

Main body

I guess the combination of my inborn empathy and hunger for knowledge showed me the way to my future calling. While it became clear to me that I want to become a doctor early on, it took me a while to choose a specific medical subfield. Dentistry has attracted my attention due to a few factors. First things first, it comes as no surprise that dentistry is a lucrative occupation. Among things to consider, the potential for achieving wealth and material well-being are among the top priorities for the majority of people. Surely, I could not help but think about what kind of lifestyle I would be able to maintain if I become a
