

Why I want to be a nurse

Many people nowadays pursue careers because they think that it is well paying and easy to be employed. Nursing however can be pursued by many but the bottom line is that not all make it to be nurses. It is a calling and passion to those who are meek, caring, and passionate of making a change in people's lives. It involves a lifetime commitment of helping individuals, families, and communities, in order to attain, maintain, or recover to optimal health. Dealing with sick people requires patience, love, and care.

Nurses are involved in assessment, diagnoses, planning, implementation and evaluation. They look after patients in several ways which include; they help mothers in delivery, physical examinations, helps the patient take medication and treatment prescribed by the doctor, observe the patients emotionally, socially, and spiritually, they involve in counseling patients and other members of society, they teach the society on health and risks, they observe, assess, evaluate the patients conditions and record the progress for the doctor to evaluate, they advice family on the best health and social services hospitals and therapy available, and they help chronic and terminally ill patients live peacefully and accept their conditions.

Employment in the health sector is certain especially for nurses who form the largest workforce in this sector. There are several reasons that lead to
