

Colonial Heroes: William Penn (1644-1718)

William Penn's family had high hopes for him that had almost nothing to do with the New World. Born in London, Penn attended some of the most prestigious schools in the country. His father believed his son would go on to serve an important role in the court of King Charles II. Instead, Penn ended up turning his back on England. In 1677 he climbed aboard a ship, his sights set on a large piece of land that would later be called Pennsylvania.

Like many of the early colonists, Penn had a reason for leaving the country of his birth to face an unknown future. Back in England, he and his friends often faced religious persecution for being Quakers, a branch of Christianity that was looked down upon at the time. When he reached the New World, Penn set about creating a colony that would serve both as a refuge for Quakers and a haven for anyone who faced religious persecution. He believed all people deserved the right to worship in any way they pleased. That belief would go on to inspire many of the founding fathers of the United States.

While his life was never easy, defending his often unpopular values, Penn made an unforgettable and incredibly valuable mark on the landscape of colonial America.

Why did Penn decide to sail to the New World?

Do you think Penn's family was happy with the life he made for himself?

Why do you think Penn's values were often so unpopular both in England and colonial America?

and Work Activities Steven D. Silver,2012-12-06 It is difficult to overstate the importance of personal consumption both to individual consumers and to the economy While consumer are recognized as valuing market goods and services for the activities they can construct from them in the frameworks of several disciplines consequences of the characteristics of goods and services they use in these activities have not been well studied In the discourse to follow I will contrast knowledge yielding and conventional goods and services as factors in the construction of activities that consumers engage in when they are not in the workplace Consumers will be seen as deciding on non work activities and the inputs to these activities according to their objectives and the values and cumulated skills they hold I will suggest that knowledge content in these activities can be efficient for consumer objectives and also have important externalities through its effect on productivity at work and economic growth The exposition will seek to elaborate these points and contribute to multi disciplinary dialogue on consumption It takes as its starting point the contention that consumption is simultaneously an economic and social psychological process and that integration of content can contribute to explanation Annual Reports of the City
